Moray Eels

A Moray eel is a type of fish with a long narrow body and a long dorsal fin turning down its back. They look little like snakes because they lack fins on the sides of their bodies.

One amazing trait of the moray eel is its two sets of jaws, one set right in front and second set in its throat. After the moray eel snags its prey with its front set of jaws, the second set of jaws grabs the food and pulls it down towards the stomach.

The moray eel lives in the cracks and holes of rocks and coral reefs. It usually feeds at night. Its great sense of smell helps it to find fish, squid, octopus, mollusks and crustaceans. A favorite meal of a moray eel is fresh octopus.
